KUWAIT, Sept 9 (KUNA) – Regional Center for Development of Educational Software (ReDSOFT) is organizing in the upcoming nine months a batch of training courses in the field of e-education, head of the center Nadir Marafi told KUNA Monday.

These training programs, taught by elite experts in the field, come in line with recommendations made during the 2nd e-education conference held in March, under the patronage of His Highness the Amir Sheikh Sabah Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah.

The March conference came out with three significant recommendations to the educational process: training and rehabilitating of the teaching staff, Arabizing educational software and holding workshops on e-education programs.

The goal of these training courses is to promote e-education and how to deal with its software in order to elevate the performance of all educational institutions in the country. The courses, which will be held from September 2013 to May 2014, target the educational staff to help them use the latest technologies.

Those who are interested in enrolling in these courses, Marafi noted, should go to the center's website. Accredited certificates will be given at the end of the training.

ReDSOFT is a non-profit regional organization. It is a leading center in the Arab region that focuses on the development and use of educational software and the use of the internet.

The center acts as a major bridge to transfer state of-the-art technology to the Arab region to improve and enhance the educational process in schools through the development and use of Information and Communication Technologies. (end)
